REUBEN ROBINSON.

Irrigation as a Pertilizer of Grass . We take the following Report from Mr. J. Stanton Gould from the July number of the Journal of the New York State Agricultural Society. It refers to the farm of Mr. Clift, who appears to have carried out a system of irrigation with much benefit and success. There are many places in Canada where irrigation might be beneficially practiced, and would any ejections more complicated than any doubtless very much add to the value of our grass lands, which, as a general thing, are too much neglected. The increased renditure to the improvement of meadows Having learned that Leonard D. Clift Esq., of Carmel, Patnam Co., N. There was occasionally a spear of sheep sorrel, and in two or three places I found three or four ox-eye daisies. A single plant of the batter cap was found in another spot. With these exceptions there was absolutely nothing on the land a letter of marque ? Because it is intended for a private-ear. Eare blue grass and white clover.

On irrigated meadows generally, the Italian rye grass (Lolium Italicum) common tye grass (1. perenne), and rough stalked meadow grass (Pou tricialius) are found in great abundance; in fact, they are usually the prevailing grasses; but I could not find a single plant of either of them on Mr. Clift's lands. have no doubt that the introduction of the two former species would increase his late to cut with the others.
